

$= 0$, because of the definition of the difference quotient . However , the definition of the limit says the difference quotient does not need to be defined when $h =$

0 . The limit is the result of letting h go to zero , meaning it is the value that $6 + h$ tends to as h becomes very small :

<formula>