In a medical clinic , a nurse escapes to the shops from a room , locking it just before someone inside can rape her . Inside the room , a group of people are screaming , panicking and self @-@ mutilating ; one man ? Frank Black ( Lance Henriksen ) ? begins pounding on a reinforced glass window until his fists bleed .

Millennium Group investigator Peter Watts ( Terry O 'Quinn ) visits Catherine Black ( Megan Gallagher ) to tell her that Frank , her husband and a fellow Group member , disappeared on his way to Yakima , Washington . Watts combs Black 's computer history for information , finding emails back and forth between Black ? using the pseudonym " David Marx " ? and a doctor called Daniel Miller . Catherine reveals that the pseudonym Black has been using is one he had also used to check into hotels during a previous mental breakdown .

Black is discovered at a bus depot by a police , his hands injured and bandaged . His pseudonym is found on a hospital bracelet ; and he has no recollection of events save for the suspicion that someone died during the gap in his memory . Watts helps Black trace Dr. Miller ( ?eljko Ivanek ) to a hotel , where he informs them that Black was seeking a cure for his " gift " ; a seemingly @-@ psychic ability to understand others ' psyches . Miller had been helping Black join a clinical trial for a drug called Proloft which would treat temporal lobe abnormalities ; however , Black refutes that he would be interested in such a thing . Visiting a clinic , Black 's ability reveals to him that he has been there before , during the nightmarish drug trial he cannot remember . From there , he is able to use the Millennium Group to persuade the drug company to release records which allow him to trace other participants . He finds that one participant died after gouging his own eyes out ; the body of the supervising nurse is later found in a dumpster .

Research on the drug given to the trial participants reveals it to be a chiral chemical , with two enantiomer forms ; one is the harmless and beneficial Proloft , the other is the dangerous hallucinogen which Black and the others ingested . Dr Miller tells Black that he had been working on drugs to cure his own visions , which he believes are similar to Black 's . One night , years earlier , Miller 's left him after he ran into the road amidst oncoming traffic , almost killing himself in a hallucinatory state . After Black leaves , Hans Ingram ( Gregory Itzin ) , the doctor responsible for the trial , breaks into Miller 's room .

Later , Miller is killed in a traffic accident after once again running onto a busy highway ; Black finds a photograph of Ingram on his body . Watts and the police investigate Ingram 's home , finding the eyeless body of the dead trial participant and sachets of something called " Smooth Time " , which they ascertain to be the nightmarish enantiomer of Proloft . Watts and the Millennium Group receive news that workers at a city office building are rioting and panicking . Black realizes that Ingram had been distributing " Smooth Time " under the guise of a sweetener in order to drug a large number of people . Tracking Ingram to the office building 's surveillance room , Black learns that the doctor believes that the country 's dependence on antidepressants has created a nation of " zombies " , and he is attempting to "wake them up" with violent hallucinogens. The doctor is arrested and taken into custody.

At home with his family, Black's motives for visiting the drug trials return to him? he is concerned about his young daughter Jordan, believing that she has inherited his abilities. He is now dissuaded from using pharmaceuticals to suppress this, opting instead to guide her to understand her gift.

"Walkabout" is the third Millennium episode penned by Chip Johannessen, after "Blood Relatives" and "Force Majeure". Johannessen would go on to write an additional ten episodes across all three seasons, including the series' final episode "Goodbye to All That". After Millennium's cancellation, Johannessen would also contribute an episode to its sister show The X-Files, 1999's "Orison".

Co-X-Files writer Tim Tankosic's contribution to this episode was his only involvement in Millennium. The episode also marked the only contribution to the series by director Cliff Bole. Bole also contributed episodes to The X-Files and Millennium creator Chris Carter's series Harsh Realm. Guest star Jirí Ivanek had also previously appeared in "Roland", an episode of The X-Files.

Lance Henriksen was concerned that it would be out of character for Frank Black to recklessly take untested drugs, and suggested adding a line of dialogue? "I don't even take aspirin"? to the script to help clue the audience in to the fact that his involvement in the clinical trial was an attempt to aid his daughter. The episode begins with a quotation translated from classical Roman orator Marcus Tullius Cicero's treatise De finibus bonorum et malorum? "I remember the very things I do not wish to; I cannot forget the things I wish to forget". The phrase is found at the beginning of Book II of the work.

"Walkabout" was first broadcast on the Fox Network on March 28, 1997. The episode earned a Nielsen rating of 6 @.@ 3 during its original broadcast, meaning that 6 @.@ 3 percent of households in the United States viewed the episode. This represented 6 @.@ 1 million households, and left the episode the sixty @-@ seventh most @-@ viewed broadcast that week.

The episode received mixed to positive reviews from critics. Robert Shearman and Lars Pearson, in their book Wanting to Believe: A Critical Guide to The X-Files, Millennium & The Lone Gunmen, rated the episode two stars out of five, comparing it to "Demons", an episode of The X-Files which was broadcast during the same season. Shearman and Pearson found "Walkabout" the better episode of the two, but felt that it became "a curiously passionate affair" after the first act? from the cold open until Black is found by the police. Shearman also noted that Jirí Ivanek's guest performance "lacked subtlety", though praised Henriksen for a "bravura performance". Bill Gibron, writing for DVD Talk, rated "Walkabout" 4 out of 5, describing it as "a fine outing". Gibron felt that the episode "forces us to confront uneasy questions", likening the narrative to "a giant puzzle with the pieces tossed at us from all angles". Zack Handlen, writing for The A.V. Club, rated "Walkabout" an A?. Handlen noted that he was pleasantly surprised that the episode did not play on clichéd amnesia tropes as he had expected, and felt that involving Black so heavily in the cold open was a good method of changing the series' usual formula.
