To promote the song , Stan embarked on a European tour , where she performed in Italy , United Kingdom , Turkey and Russia . Upon its release , Italian radio stations began playing the track on heavy rotation , thus making the song entering the top five of the iTunes Charts there after four days . An official music video for the song was first previewed with a teaser on 2 May 2016 , following which it was released onto YouTube on 3 May 2016 . Shot in Sofia , Bulgaria , at a heating power plant by Bulgarian director Ilarionov Borisov , Stan confessed about their collaboration that " [ she ] knew [ him ] for a long time and [ they ] wanted to collaborate already from [ her ] first music video . " Furthermore , she described the filming process as being " difficult " , as " the crew didn 't speak English or Romanian " .

The clip commences with a police car arriving at the heating power plant , followed by Stan lying on a bed surrounded by surveillance cameras , sporting black lingerie . She is then introduced wearing a black hat and white shirt with a tie , while a crowd of male and female dancers perform a synchronized choreography . Following this , Stan makes an appearance wearing a white dress , and a police car is shown arriving . Subsequently , two policemen get out of the car in order to search for Stan . However , they do not find her in the bed and the video ends with Stan leaving the building and the men watching material recorded by the surveillance cameras .

Alexandra Necula , writing for Romanian music website Info Music , said that the clip " exploited the sexuality and sensuality of the artist " , with her explaining that Stan 's appearance in the video portrayed a woman with pornographic tents . She said that Stan 's moves were " lascive " , and compared one of her outfits throughout the video to Madonna . Urban.ro compared the choreography of the clip to Michael Jackson 's 1980s works . Los 40 Principales cited the video for " All My People " as one of Stan 's best clips ever .
